GOOD FOR BUSINESS CHECKLIST

A Common-Sense Approach to Lawmaking

When you're looking at a bill that affects businesses, run it through this list:

- ✓ Does the bill help businesses do what they do best—make goods and provide services that people want and need? If it unnecessarily slows down business operations, think twice.
- ✓ Does the bill respect business owners and investors who put their money on the line? If the people who run, operate, and/or own the business are undermined by the bill, that's a problem.
- Does the bill keep politics out of the workplace or does it push a political agenda?
  Businesses shouldn't be turned into billboards for political agendas.
- ✓ Does the bill cut unnecessary red tape—or add more of it? Good laws bring clarity and simplify regulations. Bad laws pile on unnecessary paperwork and confusion.
- ✓ Does the bill protect freedom—speech, religion, and conscience—for everyone involved or does it try to impose a certain viewpoint on everyone? No one should be punished or lose their job or contract because of what they believe.
- Does the bill support jobs, paychecks, and economic growth in our own state? If the bill sends jobs out of state or overseas, it's not good for business.
- Does the bill respect the role of government without trying to run every corner of the economy? Government sets the rules of the game—it shouldn't try to be a player too.
- Does the bill let businesses treat people fairly without being forced into one-size-fits-all policies? Flexibility matters—what works for a tech company in the city might not work for a farm supply shop in a small town.
- ✓ Does the bill mean Wall Street wins and Main Street loses? If the bill creates a burden that only big companies can handle, that drives Mom & Pop shops out of business.
- Does the bill protect against a real threat—or just sound good in a press release? If the bill is all politics and no purpose, it is not good for business.
